The C.A.T. ZONE Keynote

In this entertaining and interactive keynote, author and speaker Mark Gibson shares with your team the C.A.T. ZONE mindset model he developed and uses himself to dream up outrageous goals, take decisive action and grit it out to the finish.

600 miles on skateboards

His C.A.T. ZONE process creates a focused team environment where people learn how to shake off the intimidation of thinking big and start having fun going after their most challenging and rewarding goals.

The three C.A.T. questions your team will ask themselves everyday...

- Are we thinking with innovative CURIOSITY?
- Are we acting with bold AUDACITY?
- Are we persisting with relentless TENACITY?

Let Mark take your audience on an entertaining journey into the world of a curiosity explorer. Using personal stories, audience interaction and fun demonstrations Mark lays out a blueprint for how anyone can go from intimidated dreamer to tenacious achiever.

Curiosity-Audacity-Tenacity

From running the 100 mile length of the Florida Keys, riding a skateboard 600 miles to Canada, riding a mountain bike 2,700 miles along the U.S. Continental Divide and much more, Mark's programs are a highly engaging and masterclass in thinking creatively, acting boldly and persevering relentlessly.

In his signature keynote Mark explains the process of how anyone can take a crazy idea and make it happen.

"They may not leave wanting to ride a bicycle across the US or run a double marathon across the Grand Canyon but they will definitely leave with a reignited outlook about what they do, how they do it and why they should do it bigger, bolder and better!"

The C.A.T. ZONE mindset performance key takeaways

- Curious teams that are driven by what's next instead of being anchored to what's done.
- Audacious action takers who consistently perform outside the restrictions of their comfort zones.
- Tenacious teams that share a distaste for quitting and routinely deliver outstanding results.
